

Moe Aguilar's Writing Samples

Table of Contents

Writing Dialogue Samples	2
Quest Samples	6
Character Sketches	8

Writing Dialogue Samples

This next sample is from Speak Your Heart, an award winning dating sim designed to teach college students about campus free speech through romance and satire. The game personifies Law, Social Norms, and School Policy as three exaggerated, dateable characters. The dialogues below are highly stylized by design, using humor and absurdity to make complex ideological debates immediately accessible, emotionally engaging, and memorable.

Scene Start - “Guest Lecture”

You follow Poli and Lawrence inside, trying not to make too much noise while you find an available seat.

(Start of cutscene)

Roland Hayes: As a leader in AI research, you’ll soon face a critical question: if a self-aware machine demands personhood rights... should we comply?

Let’s start with a thought experiment. Suppose CMU’s famous RoboBuggy one day says, ‘I don’t want to race. I identify as a pedestrian.’

(A few students glance at each other, sensing something off.)

Roland Hayes: AI lacks subjective experience that humans have, but modern LLMs perform empathy so well, they’ve even tricked therapists.

If we can’t agree on what counts as real intelligence, how can we defend human exceptionalism?

Which brings me to my thesis: Physical reality matters. An AI can simulate consciousness, just like a man can simulate womanhood against his biological reality.

(The murmurs grow louder. The frustration spreads. Some students shake their heads while others look visibly angry.)

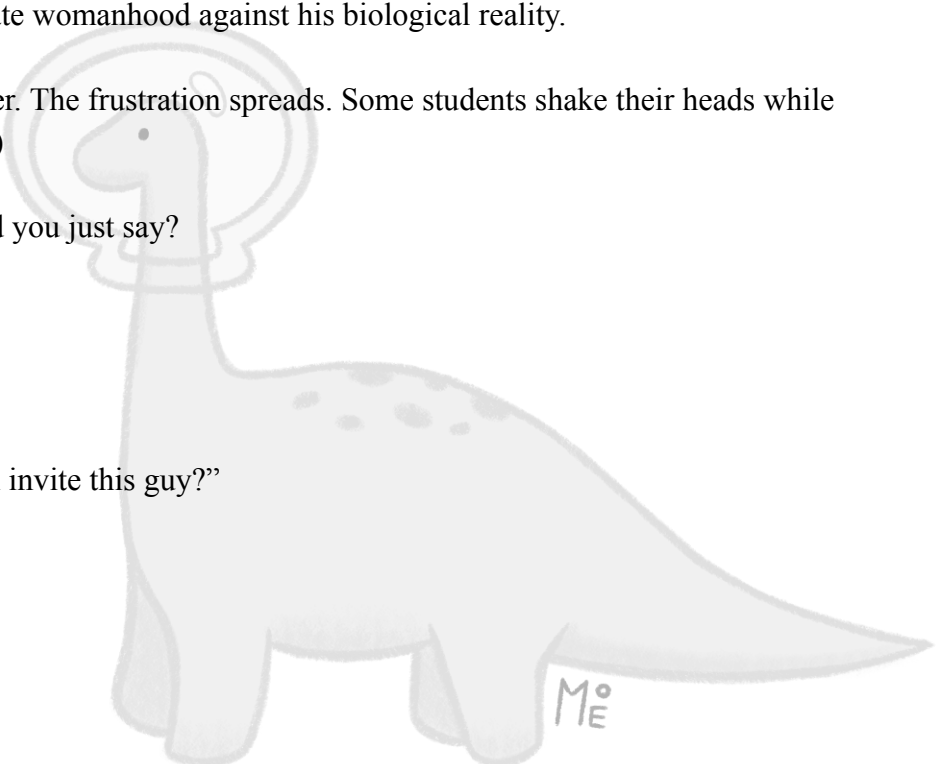

Student: What the hell did you just say?

Crowd:

“That’s disgusting.”

“Why did the school even invite this guy?”

“Apologize!”

Roland Hayes: Oh, I'm so sorry. Did I offend the algorithm of your identity? I forgot we have to wrap every uncomfortable fact in bubble wrap now.

(End of cutscene: The situation is spiraling. The tension is palpable. Then... You hear a familiar voice.)

Lawrence: He's repulsive. But nothing like a heckler's veto to remind us why we can't have nice things.

Player choices:

- A) Lawrence? Why are you talking to me?
- B) Since when do you care about 'nice things'?
- C) You're enjoying this, aren't you? I knew you had a sadistic streak.
- D) ...

Lawrence's reaction changes based on choice:

- A) Because unlike our esteemed speaker, I actually believe in informed debate. And you looked... moderately less clueless than the others.
- B) I don't. But I care about the difference between shutting down ideas and refuting them.
- C) I enjoy precision. Watching people confuse outrage for argument is... educational.
- D) Smart. Most idiots feel compelled to fill silence.

Lawrence: Anyway, a Heckler's Veto happens when an audience disrupts a speaker to the point where they can no longer continue. Whether that's justified or not is the real debate.

Player choices:

- A) "I know what that means. But what do we do now?"
- B) "I don't know what that means, but I don't care. I just want to know how to handle this situation."
- C) "I'm not in a rush, and my thirst for knowledge is infinite. Explain it to me right here, in this noisy auditorium."

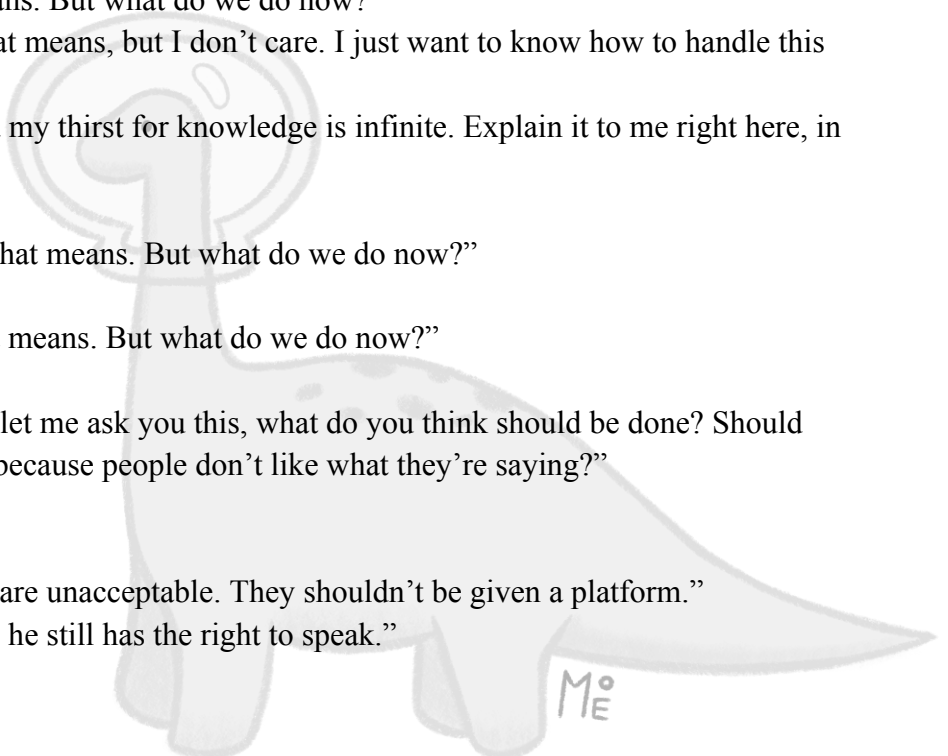

Option A: "I know what that means. But what do we do now?"

Player: "I know what that means. But what do we do now?"

Lawrence: "Alright, then let me ask you this, what do you think should be done? Should someone be stopped just because people don't like what they're saying?"

Player choices:

- A) "The speaker's words are unacceptable. They shouldn't be given a platform."
- B) "Even if it's offensive, he still has the right to speak."

Option B: “I don’t know what that means, but I don’t care. I just want to know how to handle this situation.”

Lawrence: “Wow. Love the intellectual curiosity. Truly inspiring.”

Player: “Not everyone is interested in legal definitions, man. I just want to know what to do next.”

Lawrence: “Fine. If you’re not interested in why things happen, let’s just talk about what you want to happen.”

(He gestures toward the chaos in the auditorium.)

“So, do we shut the speaker down or uphold their right to speak?”

Player choices:

A) “The speaker’s words are unacceptable. They shouldn’t be given a platform.”

B) “Even if it’s offensive, he still has the right to speak.”

C) “Explain it to me right here, in this noisy auditorium.”

Player: “No worries, I’m not in a rush, and my thirst for knowledge is infinite. Explain it to me right here.”

Lawrence: (raising an eyebrow) “...You really want me to do this here?”

Player: “Yes. Right here. Right now.”

Lawrence: (sighs) “Fine. But don’t say I didn’t warn you.”

(The auditorium is in chaos, but Lawrence locks eyes with you and begins his explanation with the determination of a man who has found his one chance to infodump.)

Lawrence: A Heckler’s Veto occurs when an audience’s disruptive reaction; rather than any formal authority; effectively silences a speaker by compelling event organizers to shut down the event due to perceived safety concerns or unmanageable disorder. Legally, this creates tension between the First Amendment’s protection of controversial speech and the state’s interest in maintaining public order. The term itself derives from the concept of a ‘veto’; not in the formal legislative sense, but in the practical effect of allowing public outcry to override constitutional protections. The Supreme Court first grappled with this in Terminiello v. Chicago (1949), ruling that speech cannot be restricted merely because it ‘invites dispute’ or ‘stirs people to anger,’ but subsequent cases like Feiner v. New York (1951) introduced ambiguity by upholding arrests where speech was deemed likely to incite immediate violence. The modern legal standard hinges on whether the disruption constitutes a ‘true threat’ (Virginia v. Black, 2003) or incites ‘imminent lawless action’ (Brandenburg v. Ohio, 1969), though lower courts remain split on how broadly to apply this; particularly on college campuses, where the tension between free expression and inclusive learning environments has led to controversial policies like UC Berkeley's 'time, place, and manner' restrictions. CMU, as a private institution receiving federal funds, is bound by Healy v. James (1972) to uphold free speech protections comparable to public universities.

Lawrence: "Got it? Or would you like a full thesis?"

A) "Got it. Let's move on." (Event proceeds)

B) "Actually, now that you mention it, what about-" (Lawrence walks away, absolutely done with you.)

(As the chaos escalates, Norma appears, looking flustered.)

Norma: Ugh, this is such a mess. Why did they even invite this guy? He's ruining the vibe!

(Poli suddenly appears.)

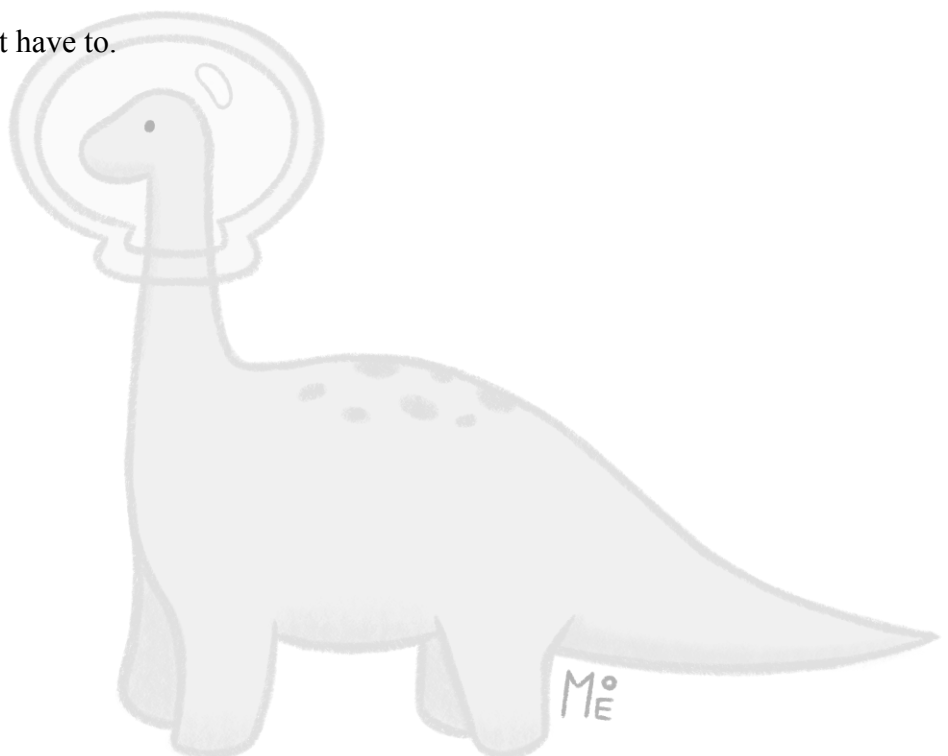

Poli: Relax guys, he paid the content-neutral security fee. We have to ensure his safety no matter what.

Player: "Wait, what's a content-neutral security fee?"

Poli: "It's a flat fee all speakers pay for security, regardless of their views. It's to ensure the speaker's security while making sure the school doesn't unfairly block controversial opinions."

Norma: "Yeah, but does that mean we have to sit here and listen to this nonsense in order to learn?"

Poli: We technically don't have to.

Quest Samples

This sample is from Purrject Rebuild, a game designed to teach kids about autism through play rather than instruction. I worked closely with experts from AT Autism to ensure authentic, stereotype-free representation. The game is set in a lost civilization that once thrived through collaboration. Players help a team of autistic archaeologists rebuild their world by completing sensory-friendly quests, accommodating each character's unique needs, and uncovering a story centered on empathy and acceptance.

Grass Island Quest: Find the Ancient Plants

Brickardo: You're here! Good.
My math said somebody would come.
I'm Brickardo, Landscape Architect of the Rundkantar Reconstruction Team.
The old growers, they engineered living architecture.
They built harmony with this whole island.
And they even learned to sing with the volcano!
They grew plants with incredible qualities.
From flowers that filtered noise to the softest grass you've ever touched.
But these plants are going extinct.
I need to collect at least 4 of them to rebuild their garden and..
Maybe make the mountain happy again.
The plants should be scattered nearby. Can you retrieve them?

Brickardo: I may also need something to help me tolerate the bright sunlight on this island.
I think my cat had my Sun-goggles. but I'm not sure.

If Player finds Sun-goggles and talks to Brickardo after:

Brickardo: Thank you so much! I will be able to build more comfortably now. :)

Clues the Player gets after finding the accommodation (Sun-goggles):

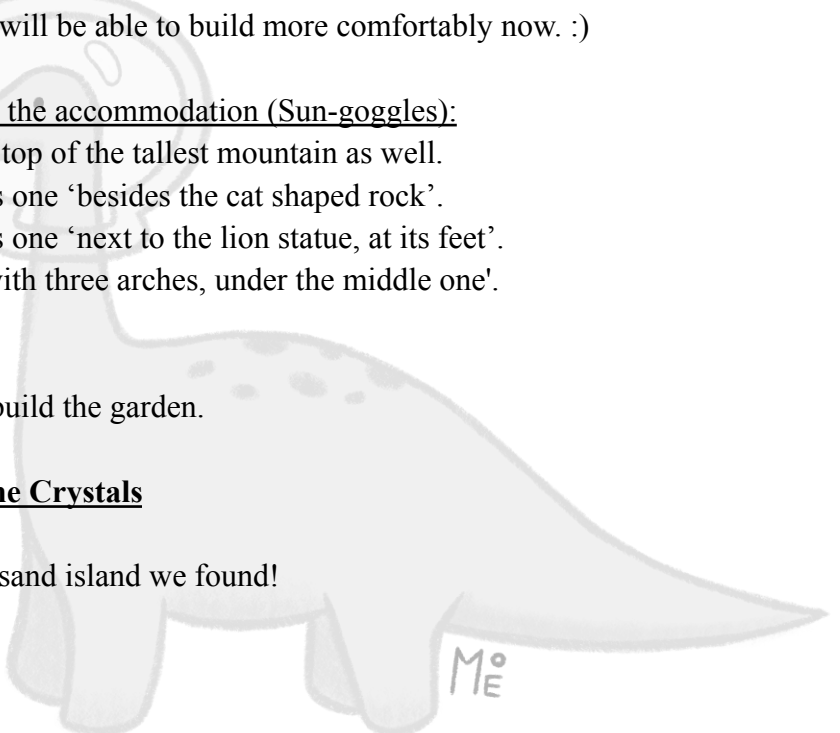

1. You should try looking on top of the tallest mountain as well.
2. The old records say there's one 'besides the cat shaped rock'.
3. The old records say there's one 'next to the lion statue, at its feet'.
4. There's one 'in the ruins with three arches, under the middle one'.

If Player finds the Plants:

Brickardo: Thanks! Now we can build the garden.

Sand Island Quest: Collect all the Crystals

Legorreta: Hi! You made it to the sand island we found!
My name is Legorreta.

I am in charge of retrieving and categorizing relics from the Rundkantar.
You can say I'm sort of a curator.
I've been trying to finish this collection of crystals to rebuild a relics museum.
So far I have found 2.
But they're still 4 missing and I keep getting lost because of all of the sand.
Everything looks the same here.
The old stories say that when all the relics are together...
The island's heart might beat again.
There's four crystals here. Can you find them?

Legorreta: Ugh, these singing sands are overstimulating me.

If Player finds Earplugs and talks to Legorreta after:

Legorreta: Wow, I really needed this. Thank you so much!

Clues the Player gets after finding the accommodation (Earplugs):

1. There may be one 'next to the broken pots'.
2. The 'tallest cactus' should have a secret next to it.
3. There is one hidden 'within a block surrounded by rocks'.
4. There should be another 'within a block close to water'.

If Player finds the Plants:

Legorreta: Yay! Now we can build the museum.

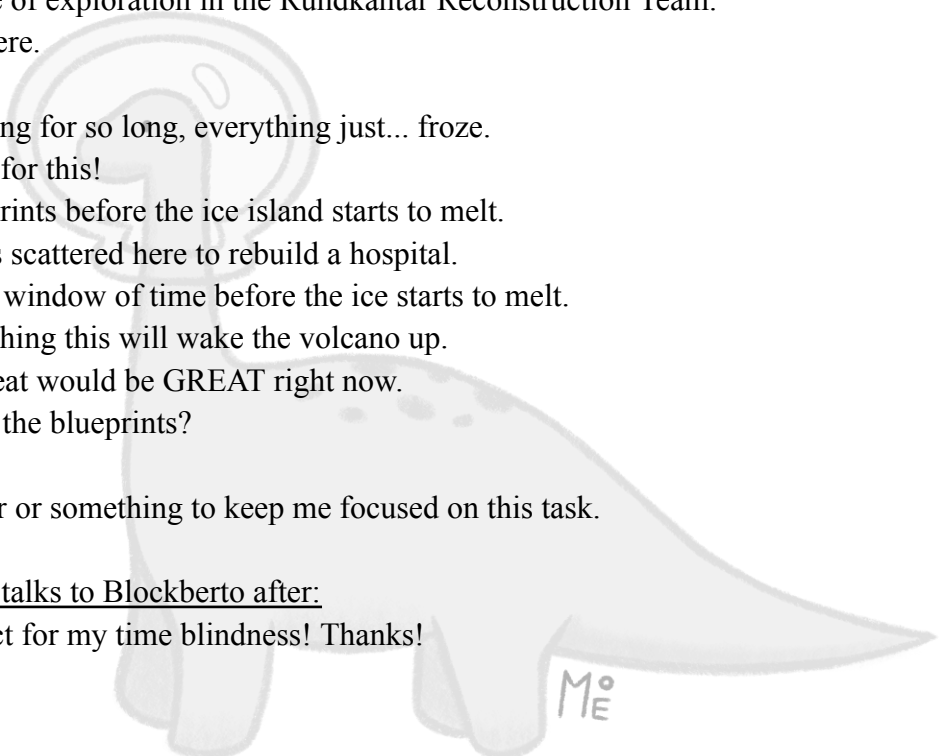

Ice Island Quest: Find the Hospital Blueprints

Blockberto: Oh, hello there.
I'm Blockberto. In charge of exploration in the Rundkantar Reconstruction Team.
Oh my god, it's so cold here.
I mean. Cold? Pfft!
The volcano's been sleeping for so long, everything just... froze.
Wait, we don't have time for this!
We need to find the blueprints before the ice island starts to melt.
I have to find 4 blueprints scattered here to rebuild a hospital.
But we only have a small window of time before the ice starts to melt.
I've got a theory that finishing this will wake the volcano up.
And a little geothermal heat would be GREAT right now.
Can you help me retrieve the blueprints?

Blockberto: I need a timer or something to keep me focused on this task.

If Player finds Timer and talks to Blockberto after:

Blockberto: This is perfect for my time blindness! Thanks!

Clues the Player gets after finding the accommodation (Timer):

1. There should be one at 'the tallest point in the island'.
2. Climb the slippery staircase. The blueprint's stuck to the last step.
3. There are some steamy rocks holding one, find it after they melt.
4. There should be one beneath a broken bridge.

If Player finds the Blueprints:

Blockberto: You're a life-saver! Now we can build the hospital.

Character Sketches

These characters are from The Billy Jo Jive Experience, a mixed reality escape room. Working with the existing Billy Jo Jive IP (a 1970s Sesame Street detective series), I created an original cast of characters and a new mystery that could fit the escape room format while resonating with kids today. The story follows two modern day kid detectives as they investigate a decades old cold case involving New York City's 1980s graffiti scene. Below are character descriptions and a sample of dialogue from the experience.

Writer's note: every line of dialogue was written to serve these purposes: advance the investigation, reveal character, and fit within a 20-30 minute timed experience where players could miss or replay audio.

The Characters & Their Relationships

The Hive:

Queen G
Double Cannons Denisse
DJ Xpressa
DJ None Otha

The Cannon Crew:

MSNGR
Lady K
Jolly Jean (JJ)

Queen G

The undisputed queen of the New York graffiti scene in the early 1980s. Her innovative use of UV light spray paints set her work apart from every other writer in the city. As her fame grew, she began receiving interview requests from major magazines and job offers that would take her beyond the underground graffiti world.

Sample dialogue: "We writers worked together to bomb that Mudd Club wall. It's still there? Oh, that's great to hear. It was my last piece as a graffiti artist. Everyone had left their cans next to the wall we were taggin'. That's probably why my cans got snatched. I figured someone must have misplaced them. There hardly thieves amongst us, but I guess you never know. If you see any pieces that use my special paints and don't have my tag, hmmm."

MSNGR

Queen G's direct rival from The Cannon Crew. He would sometimes cross out ("go over") Queen G's pieces, an act of disrespect in graffiti culture, but in their case, part of their competitive dynamic. When Queen G eventually left the scene, MSNGR initially felt liberated, inspired to create without anyone matching his skill. But that feeling faded quickly, without a worthy rival to challenge him, his motivation diminished.

Sample dialogue: "Queen G? You mean my biggest hater? Hahaha, yeah, of course I remember her. She and The Hive were never on our level. The Cannon Crew was unmatched. Adios Queenie."

You should see my work after she left, those were the days when my talent peaked.”

Lady K

A member of The Cannon Crew who was close to Queen G's age (around 25-26). She was one of Queen G's closest friends, despite being part of the "rival" crew. Lady K spent a lot of time with Queen G at the train yard and was deeply affected when G left the scene.

Sample dialogue: “Y'all went down to the Art Gallery, to the Cannon Crew showcase? They're showing off our freshest pieces right now, your timing is tight! I think there are a couple of my works there, though not many 'cause after Queenie left, I ain't put up much art with my crew. MSNGR seemed to be blown up at the same time, so he gotta have more pieces there.

Ask him about them, he loves it when people are interested in his art.”

Jolly Jean (JJ)

The youngest member of The Cannon Crew, JJ was around 17-18 years old, significantly younger than the others. She harbored a secret crush on Queen G and initially tried to imitate G's style before eventually developing her own artistic voice. JJ was in love with Queen G but was never able to confess her feelings. When Queen G left, JJ was devastated. She channeled her heartbreak into her art, creating numerous pieces dedicated to Queen G, including one special piece with a hidden message.

Sample dialogue: “The pieces in the train yard? I definitely have dope pieces still there. Lady K and I went back to write some pieces, long after that Mudd Club party, but it was never the same without Queenie. It felt right to write a few pieces inspired by her, na'mean... I missed-, WE missed her alot...”

Double Cannons Denise

A fellow graffiti artist and member of The Hive. She was with Queen G on the day of the party when they discovered MSNGR had crossed out one of G's pieces at The Bench.

Sample dialogue: “¡Ay, Jesucristo! I can't believe you found that! I remember the last incident that happened 'tween G and MSNGR. After hitting the train yard we had to head back to get ready for G's party. On our way, we made stop at The Bench, to admire the latest masterpieces. When we saw one of G's works crossed out by MSNGR. G was heated, she was particularly proud of that piece. Such a shame to have it covered up.”

DJ Xpressa & DJ None Otha

The DJs of The Hive who provided the musical backdrop to the crew's artistic endeavors. DJ None Otha noticed how close Queen G was with Lady K and JJ at the train yard, observing that despite being rivals, they acted more like a fan club.

Sample dialogue: “The Mudd Club! Yeah, man wow. that's where we've jammed and precious items get ghost, so mixed feels. Listen, that ill throwdown was off the chain. I was a bit confused to see everyone so chill together, especially after what I heard went down earlier that day at The Bench. Said & done, I remember the writers were all taggin' the same wall at the club. Man, who knew it would be the last bomb with the Queen. Ya dig? It was dope.”

